

Augrabies falls

The touring party, Me, Rienke and Nina

Nina enjoying the freedom.

Nina discovering the joy off Rollo ice-cream.

We drove about an hour from Keimoes to Augrabies. From Augrabies our next stop was Pofadder. Here we took a brave step and ate pies. How old they were and what they were we cannot say, but it was not bad and no one got ill.

Happy with a full tummy outside Pofadder/r 😊.

From Pofadder we drove to Port Nolloth via Springbok and Grootmis/Kleinsee. We decided to drive via Kleinsee (although you turn off just before Kleinsee) to Port Nolloth to enjoy more of the scenery. The road just before Kleinsee and further on to Port Nolloth was the first of many sections of corrugation we drove on the trip. Some parts of the dirt road are nice and hard, but you get sand patches that are quite soft in-between.

Road between Pofadder and Springbok

We did not arrange any accommodation in Port Nolloth. We decided to get a place once in Port Nolloth. Due to the fact that it was a long weekend and that there were 2 weddings in town on the weekend we only got a place to sleep at the third place we tried. We stayed at the Country Inn for the night where we got the last open room for the night. It cost a hefty R850 for a room with a double and single bed, on suite bathroom with a bath and a shower and a small kitchen with a bit off a living space. The breakfast the next morning was another R80 per person. We enjoyed the stay, it was just a bit more than expected, but that is probably what you will get for not booking in advance.

We took Nina's camping cot with for the trip. She slept at each stop in the cot. We decided to take the cot to keep the sleeping arrangement as safe and familiar as possible for Nina.